

In summary:

What I am proposing by way of each of these is a major reconfiguration of the mental health system-one which "modernizes" the definition of mental health treatment by infusing it with such qualities as interactive advocacy and the fostering of human rights by each and every care provider. It will replace a system which for far too many years has been characterized by the internal stigma of reactive care and a reactive and non-integrated human rights system-all contributing more to negative rather than positive outcomes for the person with mental illness. I continue to envision this state of the art-perhaps nationwide-model being launched at the new Worcester Recovery Center and Hospital.

Again, thanks for taking the time to consider this...

Here are the attachments that I referred to in my 2-6-14 response.
